The Moment (Danish "Øjeblikket") is defined by the Danish philosopher Søren Kierkegaard as the point in time where the eternal and the temporal touch.

During time each present Moment, each relative Now, ceaselessly replaces each previous present Moment.

In "The Concept of Anxiety" (1844) the Moment is depicted as the absolute Now, which take place when the non-temporal, i.e. the Eternal, intervenes in history, and the individual comprehends it.

In "Philosophical Fragments" (1844) the Moment refers to the coming of Christ to the world. That God became man at a given Moment in history is the Eternal's most significant intervention in time. This is currently identical to the "fullness of time" (Galatians 4:4).

During his confrontation with the Danish church Søren Kierkegaard in 1855 published his own magazine, "The Moment". The name plays on the two meanings, but emphasizes also a third, namely the "right moment", which occurs when the time is ripe, and the right person say what should be said.
